TERMS OF PUBLICATION

Your article has been accepted for publication by the United States Naval Institute. These terms of publication constitute an enclosure to your letter of acceptance and are effective on the date you accept our payment for the article specified in that letter.

THINKING ABOUT THE FUTURE OF THE NAVY

The rules governing acceptance and publication of your article are as follows:

(a) Articles and all rights to them become the property of the Naval Institute upon acceptance of payment by the author and will be copyrighted by the Naval Institute upon publication. Copyright is necessary for the protection of our authors to prevent their articles from falling into the public domain and being copied or printed without remuneration or credit. All material appearing in the PROCEEDINGS may be reprinted elsewhere after publication, if permission is first obtained from the Naval Institute and the proposed reprinting is not inconsistent with special agreements between the Naval Institute and the authors of the material. Should any reprint fee(s) be received, 50 per cent of the net fee(s) received by the Naval Institute will be paid to the author. The rights granted in this paragraph by the author to the Naval Institute shall endure for the original term of copyright of his article (28 years) and for any renewal or extensions of such copyright (presently a second period of 47 years).

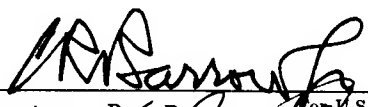

(b) Your article will be scheduled for publication as promptly as possible consistent with our editorial needs. The date of appearance of the article is at the discretion of the Naval Institute which further reserves the right not to publish the article should it appear desirable for any reason to withhold publication. In the event that it is subsequently decided not to publish your article, you will be so informed and your material and all rights for possible publication elsewhere will be returned to you. In such cases, however, you will retain any compensation paid by the Naval Institute.

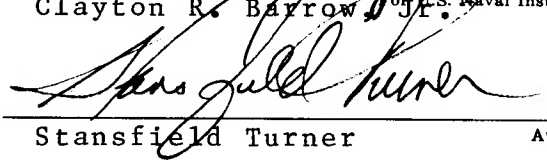

(c) In accepting articles for publication, the Naval Institute reserves the right to revise them, when necessary, in keeping with established style.

(d) You herein warrant that the article that you have submitted to the U.S. Naval Institute for publication is original and has not been previously published by you or with your knowledge or authorization. You further warrant that you are the sole author(s) and owner(s) of this article and that such article or its proposed publication by the Naval Institute does not or would not infringe upon the rights of anyone else nor violate any law.
